Recycled Gloves: Protecting People & Planet

When it comes to handling sharp objects and cutting things, safety should always be a top priority. One of the best ways to achieve this is by investing in a good pair of cut-resistant safety gloves. And you'll be pleased to know that advancements in technology and materials mean that safety gloves can now provide even greater protection against cuts and abrasions, without compromising feel or comfort.

At Stratex we've been producing high quality gloves for over a decade, and we're proud to supply safety gloves to many of Australia's biggest mining and civil construction organisations. And what's more impressive? Our most popular cut-resistant safety gloves are made using recycled materials.

Our Razorshield and Toledoshield Cut 5 safety gloves are made from high-performance polyethylene (HPPE) yarn, which offers high resistance to cuts and abrasions. But what sets them apart is that the HPPE used to create these gloves comes from recycled PET bottles. Yes, you read that right - the gloves that protect your hands are made from recycled plastic bottles!

At Stratex, we're committed to fit for purpose quality and reducing our environmental impact wherever possible. By using recycled PET bottles to create our gloves, not only are we protecting the hands of workers, but we're also helping to reduce the amount of plastic in landfills and oceans.

So the next time you're drinking from a PET bottle, remember that one day it could end up protecting your hands. Each pair of large gloves contains the equivalent of one 600ml bottle, meaning that every carton of gloves uses the equivalent of 120 recycled bottles. We're proud to offer a quality product that's both effective and sustainable.
